Film and Report on Coup in Bolivia
"The Revolution Will Not be Televised"

In April 2002, an Irish film crew happened to be filming a documentary on Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez in Caracas, when a US-backed coup - just like in Bolivia - was launched. The film crew captured the violence unleashed by the right-wing.

This documentary was the result and it helped to expose the lies of the US media as they tried to blame the loyal Venezuelan military for the horrific attack.

Directed by
Kim Bartley and
Donnacha O'Briain

And featuring a talk by
Bolivian Activist from Cochabamba Juan Baldelomar
The Growing Resistance Against the Racist US-Backed Coup

In April 2002, an Irish film crew happened to be filming a documentary on Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez in Caracas when a U.S.-backed coup was launched, just like in Bolivia. The film crew captured the violence unleashed by the right wing and popular resistance that defeated the coup. This documentary was the result, and it helped to expose the lies of the U.S. media as they tried to blame the loyal Venezuelan military for the horrific attack.
